FAMILY

Reindeer are part of the deer family. Other members in this family are elk, moose, and deer. In America, reindeer are called caribou.

ANIMAL GROUP

Reindeer are members of the mammal group. They are warm-blooded, born alive, are covered in fur, have a backbone, and

HABITAT

Reindeer live in North America and in Northern Europe. They live in some of the coldest places called the Arctic tundra. The tundra is a large flat treeless area.

BODY

A male reindeer is called a bull and a female reindeer is called a cow. Reindeer have large sharp hooves to help them travel long distances. Both male and

Their body is covered in fur to keep them warm. Their noses warm the air they breathe before it reaches their lungs. They have a small tail and short ears. This allows less area to be exposed to the cold.

DIET

Reindeer are herbivores. They eat grass, mushrooms, flowers, and moss. Their favorite food is moss. They will migrate long distances to find food.

BABIES

Reindeer usually have one baby, sometimes two at a time. Baby reindeer, or calves, grow up very quickly. A calf can walk one hour after they are born. They have antlers when they are only a few weeks old.

- Male reindeer shed their antlers every winter.
- Reindeer travel about 3,000 miles a year.
- They can run up to 48 miles per hour.
- A group of people that herd reindeer are called the Sami
- The Sami use reindeer to move things, go on sleigh rides and have them as pets.
